LGBT Social Determinants

- Families
- Discrimination
- Violence
- Health
- Schools
- Military
- Aging
- Race/Ethnicity
- Religion
- Employment
- Geography
Societal conditions (freedom from discrimination, job opportunities, availability of food, housing, health care access, etc) along with psychosocial factors (social networks, self-esteem, etc) impact the health of individuals and communities. Policies, laws, community interventions and other factors positively and negatively affect the distribution of social determinants to various population groups (based on race, beliefs, sexuality, etc).

The complex interaction of these factors, influenced by the degree of social justice in play, affects health outcomes. Health equity is impacted by the equitable or inequitable distribution of the social determinants, contributing to the status of an individual’s health. Recognition of the interplay among societal conditions, health-related behaviors and health care access in health outcomes can improve efforts toward achieving health equity.

Double Whammy!!!
As an African American, I have to say that racism and homophobia are not the same thing and the predominantly white gay community needs to be aware of that. I'm not minimizing homophobia, but I am just asserting that it is different than the discrimination that blacks have felt. But even more so is the fact that when the subject of gay marriage is brought up in the media, the people we see are all white. It's as if blacks or Latinos or Asian gays don't exist. So, if you are black person going to vote for this measure and you see no black people being portrayed, then why would you vote for it? It's just going to help white folks. But as a gay man and as an African American gay man, I know how pervasive homophobia is in our communities. Growing up, I remember being chastised if I bent my wrist downward, since that would tell people I'm gay. Because I didn't act in the hyper-masculine way that all black boys were supposed to act like, I received my fair share of the 'f___t' epithet. And I remember preachers condemning homosexuals from their pulpits and the derogatory chatter in barbershops. Because of all this, gay African Americans have tended to hide in plain sight, downplaying their sexuality.
